

Celine Dion gives the front row much more of a show than they expected

Choosing such a short dress to wear on stage was always a risk. And veteran balladeer Celine Dion obviously didn't think twice about the eye level of the audience.

The Canadian singer gave the front row a lot more than advertised when she performed at the Jamaica Jazz and Blues Festival in Trelawny, Jamaica, last Friday.

The 43-year-old mother of three accidentally flashed fans as she strutted across the stage in the dangerously short outfit.

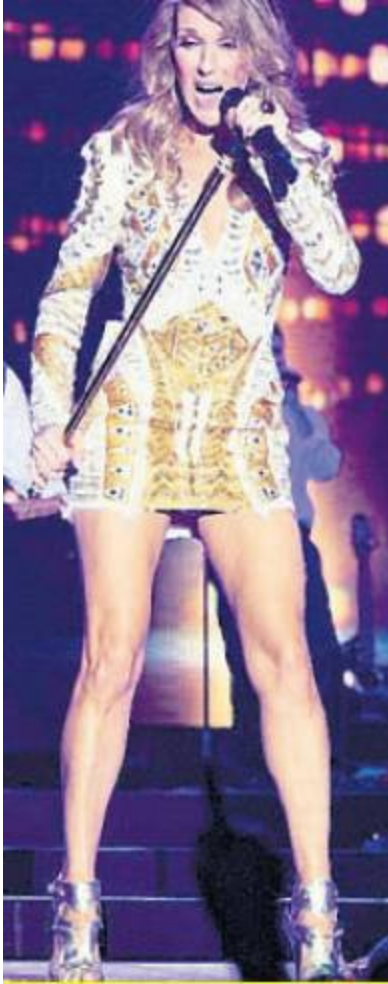

While she looked great in the eye-catching design, she clearly hadn't thought her on-stage exertions through.

She explained afterwards that the height of the stage was the real problem on the night as the length of her outfit was fine.

She said: "Because normally when people are level, the length is fine. But people were like this (she looks up)... So it was like I didn't think of the people downstairs, and me there."

Besides getting through her extensive songbook, the singer also managed to navigate through about four different stage costumes. Being a busy mother is clearly suiting her, as she looked particularly toned during her performance.

— Daily Mail

Celine looked great in the dress and later explained why she decided to wear it.